MY VISION OF CANADA

Part IV

In my last article I dealt with a few of the bogies from which Canada is suffering and from which she must rid herself if she is to develop in line with her destiny. In this article I wish further to consider a few more of these bogies.

Sectionalism is one of the real dangers of Canada. Owing to her vast territory and the sparseness of her settlements, the diversity of her resources, the people of the different sections of Canada hardly know each other. Their economic interests are different in character and often conflicting. Though united by an Act of Confederation which directs their interests to be east to west and west to east, the different Provinces of Canada often find their economic interests running north and south across an imaginary border line. It is another case where economic interests are no respectors of boundary lines or articles of Confederation, and Canada is not thinking as a unit. That is evident to any keen observer. The Maritime Provinces maintain that they have more in common with Maine and the northern New England States than they have with British Columbia and British Columbia returns the compliment. The East of Canada is largely industrial and it finds its economic interests best served by a high protective tariff. The Western Provinces are almost exclusively agricultural and insist that a free tariff is best for them since they must sell on an open market and hence buying their necessities in a closed market is a detriment. Quebec is French-Canadian and the laws, religion, language and habits of life of her people are different from the rest of Canada. Quebec is a sort of Ghetto for the French-Canadians and though their Canadianism is second to none in the country, their interests are sectional. The same is true of the English colony in Victoria, which is so English that they turn up their trousers in Victoria when it rains in London, and they don't turn them up high enough, so staunch is their colonialism. Canada's problem is to overcome this feeling of sectionalism and in its place to cultivate a strong spirit of Canadianism that will think in terms of the whole country instead of in terms of its own section. The Act of Confederation was the marriage contract that united the provinces for life and what God has joined together let no man tear asunder. But how accomplish this, many ask. The answer is by putting Canada and her future higher than personal or sectional interest. By realizing that united, Canada stands, divided, she falls. It will require vision and sacrifice, but Canadian loyalty should be made of just this sort of stuff. The problems of pioneering are with us still. They were not exhausted or solved by the pioneering ancestors of a hundred years ago. The tariff situation I find dependent on two factors, the elimination of the psychology of sectionalism and the need of population. It is futile to imagine that a protective tariff will solve Canada's economic problems. It is erroneous to believe, as some protectionists maintain, that it was the high tariff wall which made the U.S.A. prosperous as a nation. This is putting the cart before the horse. The thing that made the U.S.A. prosperous is this, that her population consumes ninety per cent. of all that, as a nation, she produces. There is the home market which a population of 110 millions creates. The U.S.A. is a self-contained nation. The high protective tariff laws followed population. It did not precede population. Canada can sustain a high tariff when she too has a home consuming market that is able in greater population than is now the case to do for her agricultural and manufacturing products what is the case in the U.S.A. In all events the tariff, like the immigration, should not be a football bandied about between political parties. The sort of tariff Canada should have should be determined scientifically, like the immigration policy. A tariff committee representing all the economic interests of the country with the able assistance of professional economists should survey the economic forces and resources and possibilities of the country and submit a tariff programme, flexible in its administration to fit changing conditions which Parliament could ratify. A permanent tariff board, consisting of the premier and a committee of Parliament, should be vested with the power to amend or change the tariff rates for good cause as is now the case in the United States, where the President is vested with power to change the tariff.

As now conceived, the tariff issue is a bogy.

I have referred in my last article to the dangers of "mental annexation" by which Canadians seem to become imbued with ideas and movements that have their origin in the United States and which the uncritical Canadian masses accept oftentimes to their own hurt. The mistaken idea of Nordic race superiority, the economic fallacy that says immigration is the direct cause of unemployment, brought forward by American Labour, the idea of the Klan to make Canada and the United States white, Protestant and for the native only, the idea of achieving national unity through racial, religious and cultural uniformity, are the bogies of mental annexation, and among these is the bogy which comes from the United States, to transform Canadian public schools into Protestant religious schools. The United States of America owes much of her greatness to her public schools, which are the nation's melting pot. In the public schools the children of all races, creeds and countries are fused into a new type of American citizenship. The public schools of Canada can do the same for Canada if they are kept free from controversial subjects such as the introduction of religion or the bible. These subjects cannot receive the consideration they deserve because the public school curriculum is already overburdened and, what is even more important, their introduction will split wide open into religious and racial warfare the cosmopolitan population of Canada at a time when Canada requires peace and goodwill between her racial and religious groups. For the sake of national unity and a national self-consciousness the public schools of Canada ought not to be hampered in the great task of fusing racial and religious differences and creating the new Canadian.

Canada needs most to get rid of her fear complexities and bogies. Fear paralyzes, hope encourages. Faith in Canada's destiny is the new gospel that should be preached.

Canada has a unique opportunity to-day. The European situation gives Canada the possibility of securing a selected type of immigration, selected in the sense I have already defined the term, especially since the gates of the United States are closed. Canada is a land flowing with the milk and honey that makes a country great in the twentieth century. Canada can become the promised land of the world if there is but enough vision and courage to make Canada this promised land.

ZIONISTS CALL ON CONSTITUENT BODIES

New York.—All Zionists are urged "to give their unqualified support" to the enterprise launched by Palestine Securities, Inc., for the relief of the acute housing shortage in Palestine, in a statement issued by Louis Lipsky, chairman of the Zionist Organization of America and addressed to the officers of Zionist groups. Palestine Securities is an agency controlled jointly by the Zionist Organization of America and the American Zion Commonwealth and is engaged in placing on the American market first mortgage bonds at 6½ per cent. interest secured by improved real estate in Palestine.

Mr. Lipsky's statement calls attention to the present difficult housing problem in Palestine created by the large immigration and by the failure of building to keep pace with it. This failure is ascribed to the lack of first mortgage loans which the new enterprise is designed to supply.

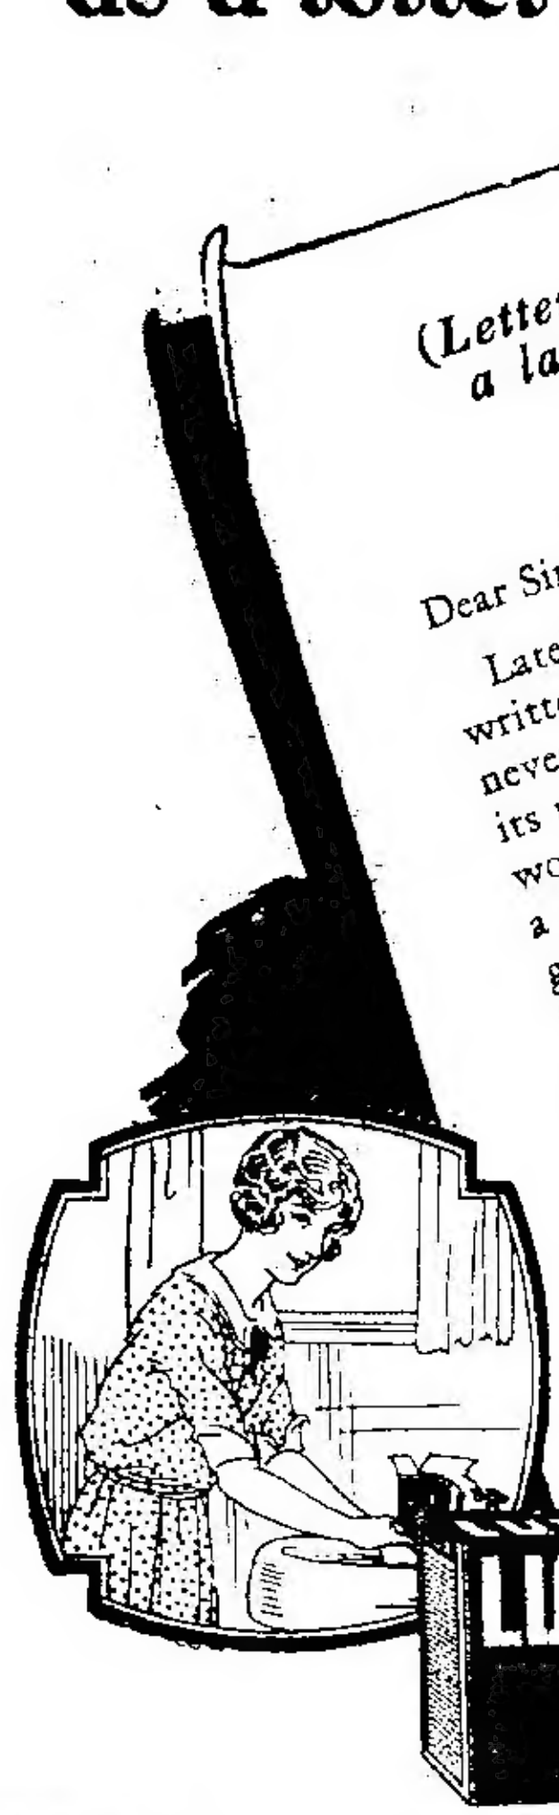
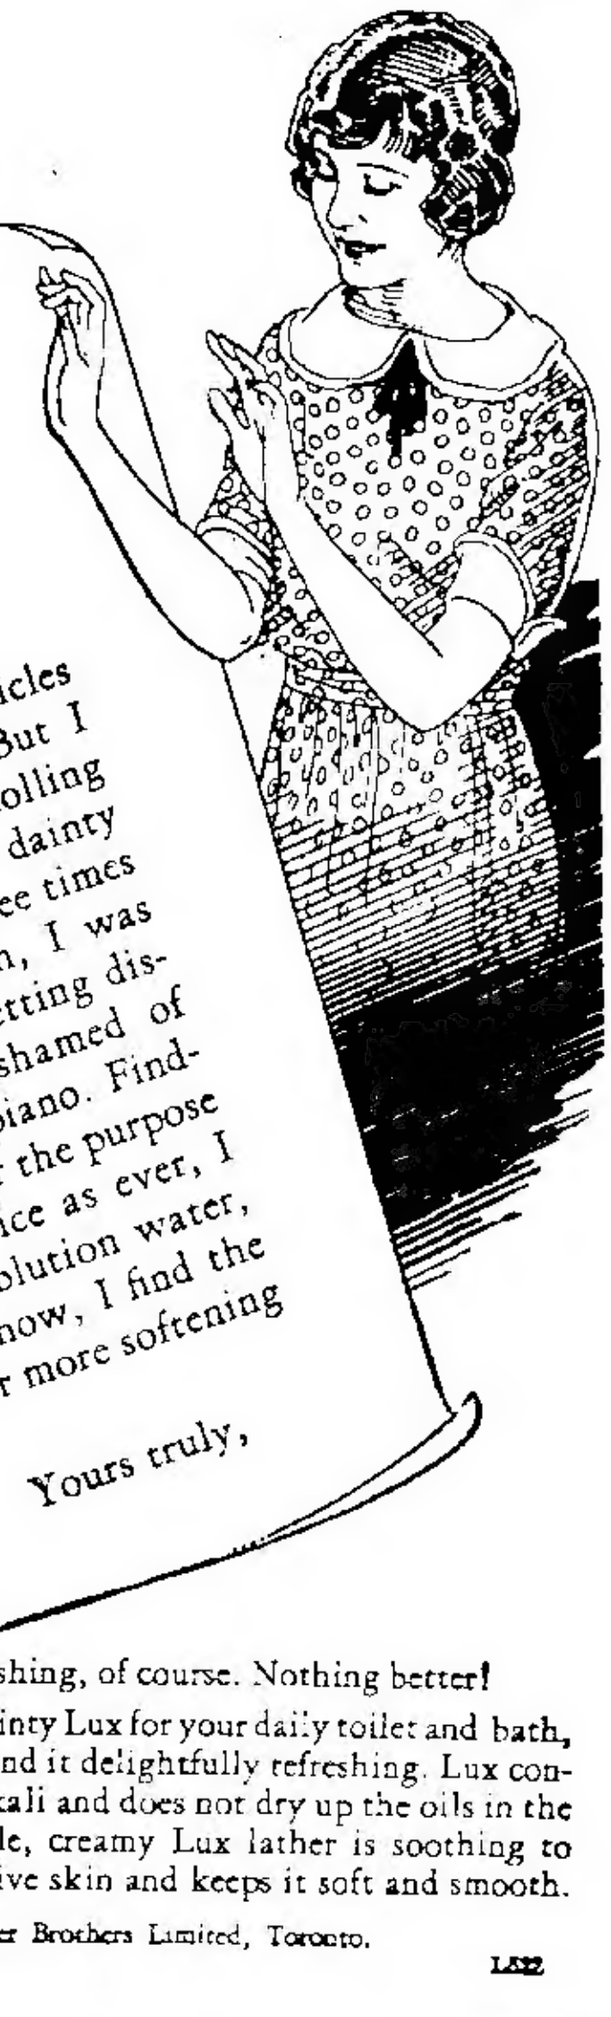
She tried Lux for dishwashing —now she uses it as a toilet soap, too





(Letter received from a lady in Ontario)

Dear Sirs:

Lately I have seen many articles written in praise of Lux. But I never yet have seen one extolling its use as a personal soap for dainty women. Until I used Lux three times a day to wash dishes with, I was grieved to see my hands getting disfigured, in fact I was ashamed of them when playing the piano. Finding that by using Lux for the purpose they soon became as nice as ever, I tried it in my daily ablution water, including bath! And now, I find the effect of using Lux far more softening on the skin.

Yours truly,

Lux for dishwashing, of course. Nothing better!

But use pure, dainty Lux for your daily toilet and bath, too! You will find it delightfully refreshing. Lux contains no free alkali and does not dry up the oils in the skin. The gentle, creamy Lux lather is soothing to the most sensitive skin and keeps it soft and smooth.

A book to be urged upon all Jews, Orthodox, Reform, Rosh-Hashonah Yom-Kippur, or those of even less complicated faiths, is "Liberalizing Liberal Judaism," by James Waterman Wise. Mr. Wise, the young son of Rabbi Stephen Wise and his wife, Louise Waterman Wise, has written in simple, rather popular style, a small book which, as an analysis and critical survey of Liberal Judaism, is masterly. It is such an arraignment of Liberal Judaism as to make it a volume equalling in interest Maurice Samuel's "You Gentiles," but with logic put in and hysteria omitted.

Against Liberal Judaism Mr. Wise lodges the complaint that it has failed to meet the vital requirements of Jews to-day, and that it stands in "terrible need" of reformation. He says that it is no longer compelling to American Israel; that "its mighty temples have become mortuary chapels"; that its reformation must move toward making Judaism serve the individual Jew instead of having the Jew serve Judaism. The writer says:

"To say that it is the duty of Jews to preserve their religion is not enough. Judaism for its own sake is not enough. Nor is the argument valid, that those who are born Jews owe allegiance only for that reason to Judaism. They do not. Religion is a personal matter—the relation of the individual to whatever he conceives to be ennobling, and no religion has a claim on any individual purely because of circumstances of birth, of tradition or of environment. Only insofar as a religion is spiritually compelling may it rightfully hope to enlist the loyalty of the individual."

The thesis of "Liberalizing Liberal Judaism" is that the aim of religion should not be to perpetuate itself, but that its function should be "to help the individual live well, in other words, to help him to live according to the highest he knows." The ideas contained in the book make it something of a revolutionary manifesto. It is certainly thought-provoking, and is recommended to all open-minded, thoughtful Jews, particularly young people who may find in it a solution of problems they meet in their approach to religious questions.

Mr. Wise's fairness and passionate interest in getting at the truth, his non-partizanship and careful examination of his subject, make of "Liberalizing Liberal Judaism," a remarkable guide to the reformation which the writer urges. Outstanding essays in the work are "The Function of the Ministry," "Jesus in Modern Judaism;" "Intermarriage" and "Religious Education for Jewish Children." Resumés of these chapters will be given in this column beginning next week.

Last year, at the annual meeting of the California Conference of Social Work, resolutions were introduced endorsing the Cummins-Vaile birth-control bill and advocating the establishment of birth-control clinics. It was decided then to wait one year before taking a definite stand with regard to the question. Last month, in a debate at Sacramento, Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, of Oakland, member of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, urged the adoption of the resolutions and the Rev. Father Robert F. Lucey, also a member of the Board and director of the Bureau of Catholic Charities of Los Angeles, opposed them. After the debate a resolution from the floor to bring about a vote on the question was tabled by the vote of 209 to 48.

Rabbi Coffee, speaking for the affirmative, advocated quite a departure from the ancient injunction, to increase and multiply and become as numerous as the sands of the sea, but people no longer live as nomads. For all that this country has wide, sparsely settled spaces, there are also great congested places where poverty rules and where there are large families, low incomes, much disease and high death rate. Judge Coatsworth, addressing the Young Men's Canadian Club of Toronto, said that one out of every 200 born in Toronto drifts into crime, and gave as the reason lack of proper parental control, improper home environment and evil influences. When parents have little or no money and many children to care for, it is natural that all must be under-privileged and under-guarded. The well-to-do know how to avail themselves of birth control information if they want it, even where it is against the law to dispense it, and can regulate their families with regard to the opportunities they have to offer their children. That the poor do not have the same advantage is one reason for the population saturation point having been reached in many places.

That the resolutions Rabbi Coffee championed were tabled by a huge vote does not mean that he has lost the fight. The California Conference of Social Work apparently is not ready to go on record as favouring birth-control. Time will see this organization falling into line with others in the birth-control movement. Rabbi Coffee meantime can continue to prepare the way.

Hadassah Pageant Committee

To manage the Pageant which will be staged in the Arena in October

MRS. A. I. WILLINSKY
MRS. A. B. BENNETT
MRS. H. SOLWAY
Joint Conveners

Miss Eva Jackson, Secretary, Zionist Building, Trinity 6162, will be pleased to register all those desirous of participating in this huge spectacular entertainment. There are still many vacancies in the cast for first-class dancers or singers.

The Hadassah Council and the individual Senior and Junior Hadassah Chapters of Toronto have just completed the annual reports of their various activities, selected the new officers and decided to discontinue general Hadassah work until the beginning of next September.

There was no Zionist activity of any description in this community in which Hadassah has failed to participate wholeheartedly; thus Hadassah has worked for and collected for the following Zionist funds: National fund, Keren Hayesod, Palestine Agricultural School, Tuberculosis Sanatorium and Palestine Orphans. Hadassah has also conducted within the respective Chapters a very intensive and fruitful Zionist propaganda of great educational value, which has contributed to make every Hadassah meeting a social, cultural and Zionist event. This work will be continued next fall by the excellent educational programme which the Hadassah Council of Toronto has prepared. The Council has also declared Monday as a Hadassah day; thus all Hadassah meetings of the year will take place on Monday.

Toronto Hadassah has also participated in a very distinguished and effective manner in the two outstanding local campaigns, the Federation Campaign and the Talmud Torah Campaign, and are at present lending their enthusiastic support to the Ukrainian Orphan Campaign. "The one joint annual affair" of Toronto Hadassah this year is a departure from the yearly "Yarids." Instead, a spectacular pageant will be staged at the Arena, in which a cast of not less than 2,000 young men and women will participate. It will be a symbolic presentation of the fulfilment of biblical prophecies and a practical vision of this fulfilment.

Atilla-Mordecai Disappoints His Mother

A Greenville Story by Elbert Aidline-Trommer

Had they stayed in Eishishok, things in the Rodziansky family would have most probably gone on as they had gone on for generations and generations. The husband would have been the bread-winner, educator and general manager of the household, and his wife would have known her place, her duties and her status in the establishment. But Eishishok was left far behind, and Greenerville, the busy, crowded Greenerville was a reality to be reckoned with, a reality that allowed for no dreams of a former existence somewhere beyond its boundaries.

If in the old country Reb Rachmiel Rodziansky had been mainly a Talmudical scholar, and a watchmaker—a profession of honour—only by avocation, things were different in America. Watchmaking became his vocation and although his better soul was still soaring in empyrean heights of Talmudical lore, although his heart still throbbed with the beauty which only faith could give him, the mornings and afternoons spent in discussions in the synagogue were gone, gone for good. Now it was rising early in the morning, a hurried trip to the House of Worship, and then back to work and thus three times a day, except, of course, the Sabbath, which remained as sacred and hallowed as in the good old days.

Together with Reb Rachmiel's standing in the Eishishok community as a scholar, was gone his prestige as a master of the house, and all because his Molly, formerly Malkeh, had taken to "Americanization." From neighbours she had heard that it was "ladies first" in America. She interpreted it to mean that there was to be a new head of the family, and that she was to fill the vacancy she herself had created by having nagged Reb Rachmiel into submission. Whether her husband ever acquiesced to this transfer of power, is hard to tell, but no longer having the moral support of his fellow-villagers he gave in, gradually but surely. And when their oldest son, Mordecai, reached the age of ten, it was his mother who resolved that the boy must make his way to fame. Also, she changed his name to Atilla—it had "a more American sound," she contended.

"Why are you torturing him so?" Mr. Rodziansky inquired one evening. "Is it not enough that he goes to public school, then to a rebbi for his Hebrew—what do you want him to fiddle for?"

"What for? Don't you know, my dear breadwinner, that those 'fiddlers' as you call them, make a tiny little more than watchmakers? Have you ever heard of Mischa Elman, or Zimbalist?"

"But how do you know that our Mordecai has talent?"

"Whether Attila," with emphasis on Atilla, "has talent? How about those other famous violinists? Were their parents richer or better than we are? Why, then, should he have less talent than all those Mischas and Yashas? Now, never you mind, just keep nibbling your watches and let me attend to Attila's career."

Reb Rachmiel took his spouse's advice and became absorbed in a large gold watch, to the accompaniment of Attila-Mordecai's violin whose strains, with their insistent discord, seemed to voice their sympathy with Mr. Rodziansky's disapproval.

A few minutes later, when Malkeh went downstairs to do some shopping, Reb Rachmiel rose and walked over to Atilla-Mordecai who stood in the parlor, a huge violin in his left hand, making faces at his reflection in the mirror. His father smiled sadly and walked out of the room. He resumed his seat at his work bench, and what with the violin strains emanating from the parlour, fell into a reverie. Half an hour passed. Mrs. Rodziansky was not back yet. Imperceptibly Reb Rachmiel dozed off.

The noisy shutting of the hall door awakened him. He opened his eyes. Molly had just come in with packages and bundles. The boy was standing at the work bench. Reb Rachmiel made ready to resume his work. The gold watch had been promised for the next morning and the jeweler for whom Rodziansky worked was very exacting. Reb Rachmiel put a magnifying glass over his left eye and looked for the spring. To his astonishment he could not find it on the table. He looked at the watch. As if by a miracle, the spring was there, in place, and the watch was ticking. The puzzled watchmaker did not know what to make of it, but when his eyes met Atilla-Mordecai's, he understood. The father's pride sang a song of joy in his heart, and he beamed a happy smile on the boy.

A few weeks later Atilla's violin lessons came to a close. Reb Rachmiel was surprised. "Well," he asked Molly, "is Mordecai's musical education completed? I've never heard of this sort of training taking so little time."

"You stick to your watches and don't say anything! Not another word from you! I am taking care of his education!" Reb Rachmiel did not reply. He smiled sweetly.

Mrs. Rodziansky did not give up planning a musical career for Atilla. The violin teacher was succeeded by a piano instructor, who, in turn, was followed by one who taught or rather attempted to teach the boy to play the guitar. Then came a Russian to teach him the balaika; after him, a teacher of singing, and all met with the same success, that is, with none.

"Of course," Mrs. Rodziansky kept nagging her husband, "if you were the right kind of father you would spank him a few times, and, never you mind, that would make a good musician of him."

"You know, I am opposed to whipping children," Reb Rachmiel ventured. "And besides, I don't think the boy deserves punishment—look what good marks he brings from school."

"You don't believe in spanking?" replied the irate Mrs. Rodziansky. "Didn't you yourself get enough of it from your father and your rebbi when you were a boy?"

Not a word did Rachmiel answer to this argument, only his eyes met Atilla-Mordecai's and the light of understanding was kindled between the father and the son.

"Some people have luck!" Malkeh remarked one day as she was perusing the theatre page of the Pigeon-Post. "If their children are not famous musicians they are at least well known singers or actors. Only our boy graduated from public school, and what future will he have? Become a shipping clerk or a messenger boy? Take Mrs. Cohen's son, Boris—I myself saw with my own eyes the other night how he acted in the movies in that picture, 'Love Me True, Love Me Long.' It must be wonderful to have such a son. And who is Mrs. Cohen? Just a nobody; her father was a driver in the old country. And how about Mischa Zabuborchik, our Greenerville inventor and genius? Well, what's to be done if my husband is too lazy to punish the boy properly? And Atilla is no better than his father—he spends all his time watching him do the watches. A fine future."

Patiently Reb Rachmiel listened to Molly's nagging. As for Atilla Mordecai himself he, too, would not reply to his mother's tauntings. He was a high school pupil, brought, as before, good marks home, and, as before, took great interest in his father's work.

Georg Brandes

By JOSEPH WOLFF

There was a time when the name Georg Brandes was taboo in a Jewish journal. We Jewish brethren count it as a great ambition of our lives to hunt out Israel from the ranks of the great and gather them into the fold.

Somewhere in Africa the savages "smell" out a brother from a crowd of strangers in a neighbouring country when that brother is urgently wanted back home to expiate some wrong. And the smell of those savages is unfailing. Our sense-organ is equally keen. Only we devote this keen sense not, heaven forbid, to ferret out evil-doers, but to bring back to the ranks a brother upon whom is shining the star of fame.

But woe betide the brother who shows an unwilling front. No disguise, no barricades will avail him. Once it is rumoured that he is a JEW—or near-Jew—then he is lost to himself. He may have to be led back by the ears, but the brethren will gather him in. He may pour out his bile upon them, but what is that compared to the heavenly satisfaction of being able to say: "The great so-and-so is a Jew!"

And so it was that Georg Brandes was enmeshed with all the hunting tackle that his compatriots could throw out. For he was a Jew and did not proclaim this fact from the housetops. When, however, the tackle failed, and Brandes was still at large, antagonism was his lot in the form of press attacks. The Yiddish press and the Yiddish cartoonists marked him out as a target at every opportunity.

To the more rational Jew it has always been a mystery, this continual tagging of the celebrity who is said to be a Jew. If he refuses to come into the fold let him enjoy good health in his neighbour's lot. There may be reasons for his aloofness. In the case of Brandes, the reasons were very pronounced. Though both his parents were Jewish, and though his maternal grandmother had obeyed strictly the Jewish dietary laws and kept separate dishes for milk and meat, he was brought up in entire ignorance of Judaism. Beyond the necessity of mentioning his racial descent to the state and school registrars, his parents never spoke of Jewish matters in any form. As an instance of this estrangement, take the following incident:

When Brandes was a youngster, he was often greatly surprised and hurt when, while walking with his nursemaid, the street boys shouted some word at him and shook their fists.

The word was "Jew."

What this word meant, the nurse refused to reveal, but his mother one day enlightened him and told him that "Jews are a people."

"Nasty people?" asked the boy.

"Yes, sometimes very ugly people."

"Can I see a Jew?"

"Yes, very easily," replied the mother, and she lifted him up to a large, oval mirror hanging on the wall.

What the boy saw elicited a shriek from him. He was a Jew himself!

Naturally such an upbringing and his later cosmopolitan life drew him almost totally away from Judaism, in so far as communal intercourse was concerned. Even when twenty-two years ago, Theodor Herzl sent Brandes his book on "A Jewish State," and asked his opinion on it and of the plan involved, he replied with the flippant anecdote of the banker Mendelssohn and Friedrich Wilhelm IV of Prussia. The Emperor had asked Mendelssohn what he thought of the plan of having the Jews return to Palestine and the banker had answered: "It is a very fine programme, and in case it becomes a reality I would wish to be appointed by the new state as ambassador—to Berlin."

But Brandes never sought to hide the fact that he was a Jew, as is charged by his enemies. In fact, he wrote many articles in which he tried to remedy their plight as he saw it. But the papers refused to publish them. He endeavoured also to pay his respects to the Jews by writing a biography of Lord Beaconsfield and Ferdinand Lasalle, in warm colours, at a time when anti-Semitism ran high. But his efforts went unrecognized. Of the merits of these "efforts" on behalf of Judaism, the writer has not the temerity to proclaim. But it is a fact that Brandes' aloofness from the Jews was not the instinctive aloofness of the assimilator or anti-Semite. He regarded the Jews as a religious sect, not as a nation with Lately his mother caught them at whispered conferences. She nagged, but to no avail. Atilla-Mordecai did not even dream of becoming a musician or actor.

One morning Reb Rachmiel came home from the synagogue with a Yiddish newspaper in his hand. His face was radiant. He looked so happy that Malkeh could not resist the temptation of reproving him:

"What's your joy about? Have you got ten cents more worth of work to-day than yesterday, my wonderful bread-winner? Or have we grown rich suddenly?"

"Yes," Reb Rachmiel answered triumphantly. "We have grown rich, but not suddenly. We have been rich for quite a while, only you did not know it. Just listen to this," and he read her an item in the Greenerville Pigeon-Post, which told of a Jewish boy, Mordecai-Rodziansky, who had invented a wireless clock regulator. The patent, the item further said, had been purchased by one of the foremost electric companies, for fifty thousand dollars.

"And," added Reb Rachmiel, "perhaps his father had something to do with it. And perhaps, if all our Jewish parents allowed their children to follow their natural bent, instead of attempting to make fiddlers or piano-bangers out of them, we would not have so many 'almost' Elmans and Kreislers begging for jobs at second-rate movie theatres."

A new illustrated monthly periodical, entitled "The Judaean," has made its appearance in Shanghai. The first number, which has just reached us, augurs well for the future of the journal.

than save food for you. It will keep your food pure and wholesome. As a matter of fact, proper refrigeration is necessary, in any weather, to keep food wholesome. Without ice, food deteriorates rapidly long before it actually spoils. It not only loses flavor, but it loses its food value and nourishing qualities. And that is a menace to health—especially in the case of children.

The regular use of ice all the year around is a real economy —and a very necessary safeguard for your family's health.

City Dairy "Certified Milk"

IN 1901 (nearly 15 years ago) we produced City Dairy "Certified Milk." We have produced and delivered it every day since.

Out at City Dairy Farms, New Lowell, we maintain beautiful herds of tuberculin-tested cows—really wonderful cows. They are washed twice a day—groomed, fed and tended like Royal Stock. They are milked by scrupulously clean, expert attendants.

City Dairy "Certified Milk" is bottled immediately after milking at City Dairy Farms under supervision of the Department of Health (Toronto). It is sent to us by express, specially packed in containers filled with chipped ice. It is milk extraordinary.

It is City Dairy "Certified Milk" that our foremost physicians, child specialists and medical authorities have prescribed over the past fourteen years for delicate babies and invalids.

City Dairy "Certified Milk" is unpasteurized milk. Ideally pure—put up in special bottles, capped, sealed and CERTIFIED by the Department of Health (Toronto).

DAVID BROWN RETURNS FROM VISIT TO RUSSIA AND PALESTINE

New York.—One hundred thousand Jews in Russia are preparing to abandon their former careers as merchants, professionals and petty traders, and become farmers, according to David A. Brown, president of the General Necessities Corporation, of Detroit, who arrived on the "Mauretania" a few days ago. Mr. Brown, who was the chairman of the "National Appeal for $14,000,000" for Jewish war sufferers, conducted in this country in 1922-23 in which about $17,000,000 was raised, visited Russia recently, as the last lap of a six months' trip around the world, during which he visited, among other countries, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, China and Palestine. "There is a tremendous movement 'back to the soil' on the part of Russian Jewry," Mr. Brown declared.

BARON ROTHSCHILD IN PALESTINE

Baron Edmond de Rothschild, of Paris, the founder of the Jewish agricultural settlements in Palestine, has been visiting Palestine and was everywhere received with marks of deepest respect and gratitude by the Jewish settlers. The first elaborate reception was accorded him at Zichron Jacob, when all the elements of the community assembled at the synagogue to do him honour. After greetings were extended to him by various organizations, the baron replied in a gracious manner and emphasized the importance of religion and Jewish traditions which should occupy the foremost part in the national home.

He later met Sir Herbert Samuel, M. Ussischkin and Nahum Sokolov. In his address Mr. Ussischkin said that Sir Herbert Samuel, Baron Edmond de Rothschild and Nahum Sokolov symbolized the three forces engaged in building up Palestine, namely, politics, land and national spirit.

EDITORIAL

The situation of Canadians to-day is like that of the Israelites after they left Egypt and entered the wilderness and received under Moses the divine law. If the Israelites had been loyal to their leader, Moses, and had faith in their destiny they would have reached the promised land in a few months. Due to their own perversity and bickering, their hankering after the fleshpots of Egypt, their lack of confidence in Moses' leadership, their failure to vision their great destiny, the journey out of the wilderness took instead forty years and those who entered the wilderness from Egypt had to die out before the promised land was reached. Canadians are in the wilderness to-day. They can get out of the wilderness and into the promised land of economic prosperity and national development, if they but have faith in their destiny, create a visioned leadership that will think in terms of the promised land and follow this leadership. It is for Canadians to choose whether they will keep Canada small and provincial an ineffective in world leadership or whether Canada shall take the place God intended her to take in the affairs of mankind. It should not take Canada the proverbial forty years to quit the wilderness. All depends in Canada's willingness to make sacrifices.

My advice to Canadians is to seize the opportunity which is theirs, not to fear initiative and leadership.

Be strong and of good courage, the future belongs to Canada.

GUGGENHEIMS MAY CONTINUE NEW YORK CONCERTS

New York.—The Guggenheim family will be "delighted" to continue the Goldman Band concerts in New York City this year if a suitable place can be found for them, according to a letter on the subject by Daniel Guggenheim, which was made public Wednesday.

Regarding the question of giving the concerts in Central Park, Mr. Guggenheim said that the matter was regarded as "closed" by the Mayor's refusal of the offer. Mr. Guggenheim's explanation of the position of himself and his family was a reply to a letter from the Citizens' Committee on Music which claims more than 350,000 signatures to a petition to Mayor Hylan to lift the ban on the Goldman concerts which followed the refusal to call them "Mayor Hyland's Free People's Concerts." Mr. Guggenheim's letter, addressed to Mrs. Bella Zilberman, president of the Citizen's Committee, follows:

"We acknowledge receipt of your letter on behalf of many music lovers in the City of New York requesting that we arrange to continue the Goldman Band concerts this summer, even though they might be given in a place less ideal than Central Park. We had hoped that we would not be drawn into the distasteful controversy that seems to have arisen from a very simple motive and act on our part, and we must refuse to enter into this controversy, except in so far as properly to answer your request.

"On November 17, 1924, we wrote to Mayor Hylan, offering to continue the Goldman concerts in Central Park for the season of 1925 under exactly the same conditions as during the season of 1924. We received no word of acceptance or refusal until January, when we were informed by the Chamberlain that our offer was not acceptable to him and the Mayor. We informed the Chamberlain that our sole desire was to provide music of educational and recreational value exactly in the same manner, and, we felt sure, with the same success, as in the past seasons for the benefit and enjoyment of the largest possible number of the people of New York City.

"We recognized fully the Mayor's power to accept or refuse our offer to donate these concerts for the people of New York, and, in so far as we are concerned, the matter has been closed, since we received his refusal.

"With the above explanation you will perhaps understand our viewpoint. If a suitable place can be found where the Goldman Band concerts can be so given as successfully to carry out our aim, we shall be delighted to continue the concerts this summmer."

New York.—A musical research tour to obtain new material for synagogal music has been undertaken by A. W. Binder, instructor in synagogue and folk music at the Jewish Institute of Religion. Mr. Binder sails on June 17 on the Berengaria, bound for Palestine, where he will spend a month taking notes on Jewish and Arabic folk songs, as well as the ancient melodies of the Yemenites. He will spend most of his time in Palestine, in Jewish farming colonies and Arab villages.

Before his return to America, Mr. Binder, who is regarded as an authority on synagogue and Jewish folk music, will visit Vienna, Berlin and Leipsig to gather old and new synagogue music by European composers which he will embody in the religious services of the Free Synagogue at Carnegie Hall, of which he is choirmaster.

Mr. Binder, who is American born and trained, is the composer of many authoritative works for the synagogue, and he is the author of the "Chanuka Songster," "Purim Songster," "Seder Melodies," and an oratorio for children entitled "Judas Maccabaeus," which has been performed all over the country. He has also written many songs on Jewish and secular subjects, and, in addition, has composed many secular works for orchestra, string quartette and other chamber music combinations.

UNION OF ANTISEMITES IN RUMANIA

At a conference of all antisemitic societies in Rumania, recently held at Jassy, it was decided to form a united antisemitic party with the name of "Actiunne Nationala Crestina." The executive consists of Professor Cuza, the leader of Rumanian antisemites, Dr. Paulescu, Dr. Samuleanu, Zelea Codreanu and others. The organ of the new party will appear with the swastika on the front page as its emblem.

The trial of Codreanu, who is accused of causing the death of the Police Prefect of Foksani, has been transferred to a small town which has no Jewish population. When the trial was opened at Foksani, an attack upon the Jews was made by the antisemites and for this reason the court adjourned to the small town without Jews. Cuza with a large number of witnesses, proceeded to that town to be present at the trial.

Senator Sanilevici, the only Jewish senator in Rumania, died in Kishineff recently. He was very active in all Jewish affairs, serving as president of the local Keren Hayesod and working in behalf of the Ukrainian refugees in Bessarabia.

national strivings. And if the truth is to be whispered it may as well be let out that Brandes knows less of the Jews than of any other people he has written about. In his recent article regarding his attitude toward the Jewish question, he states that a nation, to be what the name implies, must, at least, possess a language, whereas the Jews are even yet divided in their conviction as to which is their language—Yiddish or Hebrew. To point out the poverty of this argument is, of course, unnecessary. Another point that makes Dr. Brandes hesitate to place the Jews in the national category is that they are not all agreed upon Zionism—which strives toward nationalism—and that the early Zionists were not sure whether to regain Palestine or adopt some other land. The fact that the mere striving of even a portion of a people toward a homeland makes that people a nation does not seem to enter into the Brandes theory.

But in spite of all this he is now convinced that the Jews are entitled to mould their own destiny, and is in accord with the principles of Zionism, if not with his whole heart, at least in spirit. So that Georg Morris Cohen Brandes has turned out to be as good a Jew as the average compatriot, even though his written "defence" of his Jewish attitude is remarkably weak for so logical a thinker.

Brandes' life has not been very adventurous save when he first faced the storm of adverse opinion which his first lectures in Denmark brought about. At the age of twenty-one, after a journey through Europe, following his graduation as Ph.D., during which he made the acquaintance of Taine, Renan and Mill, he gave his first lecture at the University of Copenhagen. This lecture later formed the foreword to his now famous work, "Main Currents in Nineteenth-Century Literature."

Denmark at this time was wrapped in dusty conservatism and tradition, and the young critic, fired by the enthusiasm of the French, English and Russian culture, gave his audience a broadside that was designed to awaken them from their lethargy. His fiery advocacy of modern thought, and his condemnation of the old and stale, made him immediately the center of a raging controversy. Bitter things were said against him, and while he attracted a group of sincere friends and followers, the mass was deadly opposed to him. And in all of the attacks made upon him his Jewish birth was sure to figure prominently.

A professorship at this time became vacant at the University and Brandes, the only suitable claimant for the chair, was rejected because of the hostile prejudice against him.

All this bitterness eventually had its effect on Brandes and some years later he removed to Berlin, where he was received with extreme honour. In 1883 the Danes had begun to appreciate his genius and work more sincerely, and upon the urgent request of a group of influential friends he returned to his old home and resumed his lectures.

Brandes is now seventy six years of age and he is yet energetically continuing his work, producing the greatest masterpieces of literary criticism of this generation.

And yet it is a sad fact to record that his books—of which there are twenty-two volumes—are "poor sellers," to use professional parlance. While in New York, four years ago, he complained to a friend that the royalties in English translations of his works—English translations of Brandes books are more numerous than those in any other language—bring him in only "a few pounds a year." His "Lassalle" and "Autobiography" sold only two copies a year. His style is often tasteful and is widely known, but his books are only popular upon the shelves of the libraries and critics who receive "complimentary" copies.

How Brandes Characterized Ferdinand Lassalle

(Excerpts from "Lassalle" by Georg Brandes)

In order to understand Lassalle we must begin with a study of his fugitive writings. His prose style will stir the least emotional of men; his unusually wide learning is dominated by eloquence, entirely modern and strictly logical and practical in character; between the lines the reader can detect a suppressed enthusiasm which occasionally blazes out in letters of fire. His attacks are delivered with uncommon audacity which is supported by the iron tenacity with which he conducts his defensive operations; his language and style are often tasteful and always peculiar to him. Of mere rhetoric there is no trace. The extent of the writer's knowledge and power left no room for rhetorical display. Nor is the weight of his scholarship at any time perceptible. He marches out to battle in full panoply; but it is rare to see heavy armour so easily worn. Little has been printed that bears upon the life and personality of our author. While travelling in Germany and afterward during a residence of several years (1877-1881) in Berlin, it was my fortune to meet a considerable number of men and women, whose judgment I respect, who had known Lassalle personally. After Lassalle's sudden death had silenced the voices of his assailants, we know that public opinion of him underwent a change. Public recognition of his capacity and of his importance is by no means uncommon. On the other hand, expressions of private opinion concerning him are, for the most part, comparatively unfavourable. His private acquaintances displayed but fugitive interest in his writings, and rarely or never shared his views. His weak points were perfectly obvious, and no psychological analysis was required for the discovery of them; moreover, the private acquaintances of public men, and the majority of the educated reading public are inclined to lay undue stress upon unconcealed weaknesses, especially when such failings are entirely disregarded by a band of hero-wordhippers."

Lassalle's fundamentally distinctive temperament is apparent in the quality best expressed by the Jewish word, "chutzpah," which connotes presence of mind, impudence, temerity, resolution and effrontery; it will be readily intelligible to anyone who regards it as an extreme which the growth of culture necessarily and naturally produced by reaction from the timorous and shrinking subservience imposed upon a race that has been harassed and oppressed for more than a thousand years. We have an instance of "chutzpah" when we find Lassalle, during one of his criminal cases, flouting the public prosecutor in the course of his speech for the defence, notwithstanding the threats of the president to deny him a hearing. Even when he has been ordered to keep silent, he obtains the right of speech by initiating a discussion upon the question how far he can legally be deprived of his right to speak."

BULGARIAN JEWS SUBJECTED TO EXTORTION

The Macedonian Committees, known as the Revolutionary Committees of Bulgaria, have from time to time imposed heavy imposts on the Jews of Bulgaria. The government authorities have made attempts to prevent these illegal extortions, but they are apparently powerless to do that. Recently the Special Revolutionary Committee made a demand of six million levas of the Jewish community of Sofia, under the guise of a charitable appeal when the community explained the impossibility of paying such a sum, the committee imposed on the whole of Bulgarian Jewry a fine of sixty million levas, which, following several appeals, was finally reduced to twenty million levas. Representations were made to the Foreign Minister, M. Kalkoff, who replied that the government found it impossible to repress the activities of the Macedonian Committees and said that the Jews must pay a certain per capita sum as a witness of good faith. Individual Jews who have complained to the government were told that they must make representation direct to the Macedonian Committee.
